U.S. and Brazil Partner with Honduras to Promote Food Security

The governments of the United States and Brazil today formalized a partnership with the Government of Honduras to increase agriculture production, decrease undernutrition, and promote renewable energy in Honduras, one of the poorest countries in the Western Hemisphere.

"By leveraging the joint expertise of the United States and Brazil we have an opportunity to help Hondurans rise out of poverty," said Mark Lopes, USAID's deputy assistant administrator for Latin America and the Caribbean. "We can impact the lives of poor farmers who can double their income with guidance and assistance from the region."

The partnership builds upon the U.S. Government's Feed the Future initiative, a multi-agency effort to lift rural households out of poverty through improved agricultural development and nutrition. The Government of Brazil's expertise in hunger eradication, poverty reduction programs, research, renewable energy, and agricultural technologies will also benefit Honduras.
